Fractured Land

Young Aboriginal leader and lawyer Caleb Behn knows the feeling of being “fractured” too well as he struggles with his role in protecting his northern British Columbia territory and its people, currently under siege from some of the world’s largest natural gas and fracking operations. Through his travels FRACTURED LAND explores the practice and the strain it has put on the country’s First Nations communities and government relations, especially in Northern B.C. Following Behn from the pristine North to downtown Vancouver and a fracked territory in New Zealand, this documentary provides optimism and empowerment toward issues that can seem dire and insurmountable. 2015, 78min.
